Level/Year	Undergraduate
Type	Compulsory
Prerequisites	-
Description	This class has been designed to introduce a brief history of Modern Turkey to international students via explaining the basic historical roots of the current Turkish society. In the second semester of this course, the instructor will focus on the establishment and successive history of the Turkish Republic. In this sense, he will mainly discuss how the Ottoman Empire whose multi-ethnic and multi-religious social structure has been ruled by a single family for about 600 years transformed to a national state which claimed its sovereignty against an imperialist occupation. Then, the instructor will narrate emergence of the single party rule and establishment of a modern society in the 1920s and 1930s and then transition to multi-party system and economic, social, and political transformations between 1940s and 200s alongside with establishment of secular institutions and their transformations and spread of the notions of citizenships, rights and liberties in the Turkish society. Around such themes, the major political, economic, and social events will be discussed with students.
Objectives	The main goals of the course are as follows: (1) Introducing a historical perspective to international students to understand the Turkish society (2) Providing basic historical knowledge about the political, social, economic, and cultural roots of the Turkish state and society (3) Infusing students with the skill of discussing and presenting a historical subject about the Turkish history and international history
Learning Outcomes	By the end of this course, students will be able: LO1: Explain historical roots of the society in which they live through engaging in lectures and in-class discussions. LO2: Foster their adaptation process to a different society through understanding its roots. LO3: Realize differences and similarities of the Turkish society with the global history through making presentations about the history of another country in the same period. LO4: Improve their skill of making an oral presentation about a historical subject through preparing in-class presentations. LO5: Build-up their ability to discuss the historical events by analyzing cultural products through watching historical movies and writing short essays about them.
